MISSION WORK TOLD IN FIGURES

Rev. George H. Wiley Summarizes the Work of the Methodist Mission.

GREAT PRACTICAL CHARITY

Men Fed, Clothed and Housed; Children Taught and Souls Sought There.

The following report presented at the recent session of the Virginia Conference of the Methodist Church, South, in Lynchburg, by Rev. Geo. H. Wiley, succinctly and effectively shows the great practical value of that institution to the city of Richmond and to humanity in general: "We have three distinct branches of work at the mission. We are trying to help men in body and soul and mind, Of course, the most important work is that which is done for the soul; but often it is impossible to get a chânce at the soul unless we offer help to the body, for the reason that the body and its needs are of greater importance to the subjects within our reach than the soul or mind. This is the explanation of the management's varied work in charity and education.

"To come at once to our report, we education.

"To come at once to our report, we have had a better year in most respects than any since our opening. In some directions a wonderful increase and development have occurred. In one or two particulars we have not had as good work as herectoree. A word about each of these three branches.

First-The Mind.

of these three branches.

First—The Mind.

We have a night school meeting each Monday and Thursday under the direction of Mr. Lewis McK. Judkins. This is an important feature at the mission. There is a training class, under Mrs. Kerns and Miss Gully, where girls are taught in cooking, housekeeping and nursing, in a limited way. Mrs. Creer, with half dozon assistants is running one of the best-attended gatherings in the mission in the shape of a sewing class for small girls.

Mrs. Jobson has on Saturday afternoons a temperance band for the education of children on this important subject.

"In the second place, we have for the body a lunch room, where 4,000 lunches were sold during the year: lodging rooms, where 2,200 men were lodged and 400 given shelter; baths, where 550 men and boys bathed; a total of 2,912 pleces of clothing were sent to us and given away; in all, 450 patients were treated in the dispensary; a total of 469 visits were made to the homes of the people.

"Over 8,000 men and boys were in the building and reading rooms. In all, 210 men were placed at steady work, and 1,500 men given job work. This includes men who sawed wood at the mission yard.

'One thousand four hundred were fed-at brenkfast for the homeless, and more than 3,000 quarts of soup were given away. One carload of wood and 320 in cash was expended in all directions for the poor. Nearly 500 men were fed at the Christmas dinner. Including the dis-pensary, soup kitchen, wardrobe and all other expenditures, at least $1,500 was spent for the poor.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)
CHESTERFIELD, VA., December 10.—
The county road force is now employed in work on the public road at Swift Creek bridge, near the courthouse, preparatory to the placing of the new steel bridge contracted for several months ago. The approaches to the new bridge from each side will be a few feet distant from the present road at the two ends of the old bridge, and instead of being curved, as the persent one, the new bridge will be straight. Three hundred dollars has already been spent for stone abutments, and things are now in shape for the contractors—the Virginia Bridge and Iron Company—to perform their part of the work.

The completed structure will cost all signs of exhausting the supply.

The well has gone only ten feet on the underlying rock and probably a deeper well would give a much larger supply. This find of splendld water is very gratifying to the citizens of this rapidly growing town, as this single well insures an ample supply for a town of 1,000 or 2,000 peopleb and offers a source of future nupply for its growing manufacturing interests.

Mr. Ogburn brought a sample of the water to Richmond yesterday for analysis.

A LOST LETTER.

We left the house soon after breakfast they certainly do eat funny here—breakfast about 3 o'clock; think of it!). We did not have far to go, and pretty soon we turned into Broad Street and walked down the right side about two squares (the other side is called the wrong side; why, do you suppose?) We went into a great big store that was filled with people and for a while I just stood and looked. Aunty was watching me, as I found out, for whon I said: "Oh, look there, Aunt Mary!" I saw a funny look in her eye. You can't imagine what it was, mana, dear. It was a great big Red Riding Hood, nearly as big as me. She was just bidding her mother good-bye, and then she was passing through the woods, and after a while she reaches grandmar's, and what do you think was in bed? A great big wolf, all covered up and with a night cap on. It made me feel so nice and creepy.

Then a little farther on we saw the Old Woman in the Shoe. She had about fifty children, and she is as big as you, and on the other side of the store was a great big Santy just coming out of a chimney with his pack of toys. And there is a Christmas tree, too. My! it was fine.

After we saw all that Aunty took me in the basement, and you never saw in all your life as many books. I could have stayed there all day. I think everything that has been printed at all was there. Then we went to the home of the dolls. Dolls were everywhere I just wanted to take off my things and play and play, it was right funny; they had all the candy right alongside the dolls. Then we went over and saw the toys, but they wern't toys; they were real big things, like a great big girl would want, as well as the little buby, I was sorry when Aunty said we had to go, but when I said something about staying lenger, she said: "My den, It is dinner time." We had been there the whole morning.

During all his illness he bore himself with a fortitude that was beautiful to witness. He was ever uncomplaining, ever thoughful and solicitous for those he loved and who loved him. He allowed no word of impatience to escape him, and was at all times anxious to spare the feelings of his devoted loved ones who constantly watched at his bedside. The sweet, calm, Christian patience he exhibited through all his pain and suffering was a magnificent sermon to all who came in contact with him. He was fully prepared to die, but naturally, in one so young, did not want to die, although expressing no abhorrence at the thought. 17, 1904. Robert F. Goode was suffering from heart failure at the time of Mrs. Buchanan's death, but was able to walk about the house and yard. The shock, however, was more than he could bear, and he failed rapidly from that time. He saw Mrs, Buchanan for the first time after fifty years in 1903, and had returned to spend the remainder of his life with her. Fifty years in Texas did not destroy his love for "the Old Dominion" and her people, and he now sleeps in her bosom among his loved ones.

His father was a son of William F.

among his loved ones. His father was a son of William F Goode and brother of the late Bennat Goode, of Chesterfield county, and the mothers of O. F. and Powhatan Wolsiger of Richmond, and Colonel J. H. Earnest of this county all dood

DEATHS.

CLOPTON.—EDGAR HENRY CLOPTON youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Jones Clopton, of Havers Hall, Glourester county, Va., fell asleep in Jeaus at his father's home September 1st, 1904, in the eighteenth year of his age, after a protructed illness of typhoid fever, The deceased wins a large-hearted, may youth, beloved and estcemed by those who knew him. A few months ago he left home to take a position in West Point, where he was taken sick, and from which place he returned to his parental home. Everything love and means, skilled physicians and nurse could devise was done for him, while loving friends showed the greatest concern in his behalf. In infancy he was baptized by the rector of Warre P. B. Clurch. The religious instruction and training which he received in childhood were of inestimable benefit to him. Early in his sickness his minister was permitted to speak to him the comforting words of Christ's gospel. It was joyful to see how his heart and faith laid noid of Christ and Ilis promises, and to see the comfort and peace that filled his heart when assured he was already "a member of Christ, the child of God and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven"; and that God loved him with amazing love, as seen in His giving His son Jesus Christ to be his Saviour. On Friday, September 2d, a large number of sorrowing friends followed all that was mortal of this doar youth to Ware Church, where the burial service was read, and his body was laid to rest in the cemetery to awaft the resurrection in the last day, May God's blessing and comfort abide upon his parents, sister and brothers.
